Linked by Fate

BY CHARLES GARVICE

Author of "The Verdict of the Heart," "A Heritage of Hate," "Nell of Shorne Mills," "Paid For," "A Modern Juliet," Etc.

"Thank you," he said, simply, as he put it on. He did not know that her eyes were raised to his searchingly, almost accusingly. "I'm afraid you sat up late last night to mend it. I saw the light in your hut. I'm sorry. I'll be more careful in the future. You look tired this morning." "I'm not in the least tired," she retorted with a little snap in her voice, usually so calm and low. "If you do not want anything else—"

She went out and Mannering turned to his breakfast again; but her coldness, her strangeness had spoiled his appetite. What was the matter with her? She had removed his ring from her finger, was stand-off-ish and sharp with him.

With a sigh he pushed his plate away from him and shouldering his gun went off to the woods, Nina watching him from her partly opened door.

Mannering selected the biggest tree, felled it and, scooping out a length of the trunk, made a fairly good canoe.

It was a tremendous day's work and he regarded it with pardonable pride; but he was too tired to haul it down to the beach and he left it reluctantly.

When he entered the saloon she was standing by the table. He saw, with a sigh of relief, that it was laid for two. But she had on her old frock, and the bit of ribbon was absent from her neck; and she scarcely lifted her long lashes as he wished her "good evening."

"I hope you're better," he said, blundering like a man.

She bit her lip impatiently.

"I have not been ill," she said with ominous emphasis, as she passed him his plate.

"I've finished the boat," he said, trying to speak as if he did not notice her coolness.

She fixed her eyes on the plate.

"Why did the raft not do?" she asked.

"Oh, it is not nearly as safe as a boat. I could not steer it or sail it as well. I made the raft because"—he hesitated and stammered—"there is no immediate hurry now. Oh"—hastily—"this boat—it's only a canoe—is ever so much better! I'm hoping that we shall be able to reach one of the inhabited islands; perhaps, if we have luck, the mainland."

Her face grew set and her lips came together straightly as if she were bracing herself to an effort.

"And—and—if we do, Mr. Mannering," she said in a low voice, which was unalloyed with her agitation, "what will you do? Will you tell the people we meet that—that we are married?"

Mannering gazed at her blankly, as if he were trying to see what was passing in her mind.

"I—I don't know; I haven't thought of it," she stammered, his face flushing. "What—what would you wish me to do?"

"What a wind is blowing!" she said in a more cheerful voice.

"All the better for us; it is blowing from the right quarter," he said.

"But it is blowing very hard," she remarked. "See how it shakes the saloon! I—I am glad we have agreed so well, Mr. Mannering. I will go now. You say we shall be able to sail to-morrow?"

"Yes, to-morrow," he said, rising as he spoke.

She wished him good-night, and went out, and Mannering lit his pipe and sat pondering. The vein of reflection which he struck was not a flattering one. The girl he had married was so indifferent—disliked him so much, to put it plainly—that she had bargained with him to conceal their marriage. And he had consented. He drowsed over his pipe for half an hour or so, then he rose and made for his hut. But when he came in sight of the spot where Nina's hut had stood, he stopped short with his heart in his mouth. The hut was no longer there and only a litter of poles and undergrowth remained.

He ran, calling upon her name, and found her lying on the ground, with one of the heaviest poles across her slim form.

With a Herculean effort he dragged the pole from off her and, raising her in his arms, called upon her frantically:

"Nina, Nina! Are you killed—dead? Nina!"

Her eyes, upon which his frantic gaze was fixed, did not open, but he felt her shudder in his arms, and, unconsciously, he pressed her still more closely to his breast.

"Nina, Miss Nina, are you hurt?" he called, his lips close to her ears, for the storm had risen again. "Oh, speak to me! Try—try to speak to me!"

She opened her eyes, and as a flash of lightning lit up their violet depths, a gasp of relief, of thanksgiving, escaped his trembling lips.

"Oh, thank God! I—I thought you had been killed. Are you—are you hurt?"

She clung to him—still unconscious—

"I—I don't know!" she breathed with labored breath. "The—hut fell in as I entered—Oh—I am going! Hold me!"

He held her tightly to his breast, and, not knowing what he was doing, put his lips to hers.

It was a kiss—a kiss of infinite pity rather than passion—but, weak and distraught with fear as she was, Nina was conscious of it.

The blood burnt in her face for a moment, then left it pale and wan.

"I—I am all right," she faltered, struggling feebly to free herself from his grasp. "I—I am more frightened and faint than hurt."

"Are you sure—are you sure?" he demanded hoarsely. "You do not

She rose, feverish and with thirst; but above her suffering towered her mental agony. She loved him! The fair face of that other rose before her mockingly, ly, and embittered, poignant, glorious, wonderful dawn as a daily miracle upon island.

As if impelled by the spite, maidenly pride, which would her rest, she went down to beach. On her way she had the saloon, and, after a hesitation, she opened the looked in.

Mannering lay at full length on the fire, his head resting on his arm, on which was the wound caused by one of the beams. His face was troubled, breath came short and pale, own grew labored and pained, bent over him, and her love welled up in her heart and so that it was hard for her to touch him, if with her finger. As it was, she bent so her lips nearly touched his, breath stirred his hair. But alas! at that moment he was in his sleep and she heard him "Judith, Judith!"

She rose as if something had her, and in a conflict of mind went down to the beach. It tide and the raft tugged at it. She gazed at it then the color rose to her cheeks and her eyes glowed with it.

She knew that if she returned the island with him her love betray her. Why should she here were the means—the final means—of escape. The which Mannering had prepared close by the raft; it was as use as on the day he had if they were trying to see what was passing in her mind.

"I—I don't know; I haven't thought of it," she stammered, his face flushing. "What—what would you wish me to do?"

"I—I would rather you did not," she replied. "I—I want to make a—bargain with you."

"Yes?" he said, interrogatively.

She raised her eyes and looked him steadily, bravely, in the face.

"I want to tell you that I know how great a sacrifice you made in marriage—doing what poor Mr. Fleming wished."

"As to that—the sacrifice was yours," he put in eagerly, earnestly; but she ignored his interruption and went on:

"If we escape to England—and, oh, I hope and trust we may—I want you to understand that—that the marriage, what we have done—hasn't any meaning, significance; that we shall part as if—as if it had not been done. I will give you my word—I will swear it if you wish it—that I will never tell anyone of—the ceremony we went through, never, as long as I live; and I need not say that I will never—oh, never!—make any claim on you."

Her voice broke and the tears burnt in her eyes; but she drove them back and continued:

"And I want you to promise that you will tell no one—that you will never make any claim on me."

He was silent for a moment or two, his eyes bent on his plate.

"I understand, and, of course, I promise," he said in a low voice and rather grimly. "I know how you feel, at least I think I do, and I respect that feeling. It would be very strange if I didn't see the—the way in which you regard our marriage—"

"Was it a marriage?" she broke in, abruptly. "There were no witnesses; we were not in church—"

"It doesn't matter," he said, almost gently. "What I have to do is to study your wishes—to follow them. All I ask is that—that while we are together—"

He stopped and gazed at her earnestly.

"Well?" she asked, as he paused. "That you will not treat me as if I were an enemy—as if I had planned the shipwreck and the—the marriage from sheer malice. See, now, Miss Nina, you and I are the victims of fate. It was not my doing that you and I were left alone on this desolate place, but the will of Providence."

"I know, I know!" she broke in. "I am not blaming you. But for you I should not be alive at this moment. Oh, I am grateful for all you have done for me; but, oh, don't you see how I am placed? I want you to promise that you will not—not claim me, if we escape, if we reach England; that you will not tell anyone that—that we were married."

"I promise," he said, gravely.

"And I promise on my side," she responded, earnestly. "If Heaven should befriend us and help us to get away from this dreadful island, I swear that I will not tell a living soul that—that poor Mr. Fleming persuaded us to be—married."

"Agreed!" said Mannering, grimly. She drew a long breath of relief and rose from the table.

"I—I am all right," she faltered, struggling feebly to free herself from his grasp. "I—I am more frightened and faint than hurt."

"Are you sure—are you sure?" he demanded hoarsely. "You do not know yet. The beam may have fallen on you. Don't try to stand. Lean on me. Oh, poor girl, poor girl! And it was my fault—mine! I heard the storm. I ought to have come with you to have seen that the hut was safe."

As he spoke he pressed her to him still more closely, and so great was her weakness that she yielded to his embrace—for it was nothing less—and, half unconscious as she was, found a subtle pleasure, comfort, in the yielding.

"I'll take you to the other hut," he said. "No, you can't walk. I must carry you. Ah, let me!"

She struggled faintly, feebly, but he lifted her in his strong arms and carried her into his hut and laid her on his bed.

"Now rest there. Try and sleep!" he exhorted her in a low and gentle voice. "Let me see if you are hurt. Where did the beam fall on you—your arms, your chest?"

She shook her head and feebly strove to put his hands from her.

"I don't think you are badly hurt. It must have been the shock, the fright. Tell me, do you feel any pain?"

"No, no!" she gasped. The gentle, commiserating touch of his strong hands was like an anodyne and hypnotized her. "I am in no pain; I am not hurt. If—if you will go now—"

He rose at last, but still bent over her, his face lined with anxiety.

"All my fault!" he muttered. "Let me put the pillow higher for you. Oh, God, if there were only a doctor to see you! I don't know whether you are hurt or not!"

"No, no, I'm not hurt!" she gasped once more, but in so low, so feeble a voice, that he bent low on his knees to catch it. "Go—now."

He went at last, slowly, reluctantly, and with a backward glance that held pity—and was it something warmer?—in it.

The storm fell as suddenly as it had risen; and Mannering slowly and with immense calm and patience rebuilt Nina's hut. His heart was full of pity for her—of something warmer, of which he was only partly and dimly conscious. He did not know that he had kissed her, that his words, his actions had been full of love, of a man's love, for the woman.

And Nina! She lay awake tossing from side to side—on his bed. The memory of the kiss burnt in her consciousness. She had lain in his arms; she had yielded herself to him; she had, though he did not know it, been glad of his embrace, the touch of his lips.

Maiden shame burnt like a fire within her bosom—a fierce, merciless fire. Had he known, guessed at, the thrill of surrender that had run through her at his embrace? Had he known what his kiss meant to her? Like a flash of lightning from the rent skies she knew that she loved him. This man who had saved her life at least twice—first from the sea and secondly from the Lascar—who had watched over her, guarded her, provided for her life's daily needs, was more to her than life itself—was the being one means when one whispers "lover." And he was her husband by the caprice of Fate—her husband against his will.

Had he kissed her or did she imagine it? If he did it made matters ten thousand times worse, for he had kissed her in pity, not in love. Not in love, for did he not carry in his betrayal her. Why should she? Here were the means—the tidal means—of escape. The which Mannering had prepared close by the raft; it was a use as on the day he had that she and poor Fleming set sail. Why should she? She might reach the grounds of the Mannering house on the other hand she might any rate she would have a self-respect—would save a shame of revealing her love man.

The idea, the thought, blood to her face. She ran, hut and put her spare clothing, and wrapping the certificate and Fleming's piece of oilcloth, put then bosom of her dress, then the beach and the raft.

But she could not go a word of farewell. She was much from herself as from she owed him a word of—of good-bye.

She tore a blank leaf from her journal and writing (am going for both our sabbath member our promise. Nina, with a stone to the rock in spot where the raft floated took the box of provisions set the raft loose from its ran up the sail to the n pushed off into the rolling.

Mannering did not wait some hours later. His hard work of the previous the stress and strain of the night had exhausted worked with the guilty cor of being "late," and he went the routine tasks of the morning.

He laid and lit the fire in the can with water; and as he was performing the task doing so mechanically, with a memory of last night's experience mingling in his brain. He had in his arms. Had he—had he? Had he spoken a word of love for her that welled up heart?

He went up to the hut in call her—to get her outside it out with her there and tell her, she was his wife. He murmured the words tenderly, with a thrill of longing. His wife! How meant to him!

But he would not call doubt she was tired. He went and at breakfast, as they sat side to each other, like husband, he would open his heart—would tell her that he loved—yes, claim her!

CHAPTER VIII.

Mannering sank on to the rock on which Nina had placed her farewell letter, and, covering his face with his hands, sat motionless as a statue of grief. He did not think of himself—of the awful solitude to which her flight had doomed him. Only one thought racked him, and that was that she had flown because she was afraid of him. She had preferred to trust the treacherous, murderous sea rather than him.

It was a hideous reflection, and it nearly drove him mad. She had not waited until the boat had been launched, but had taken the raft—had run all and every risk rather than remain another day on the island with him or confide herself to his care in a joint voyage.

Hours passed and he still sat stir-ing with vacant eyes at the sea. It did not occur to him to launch the boat and attempt to follow her.
 What good would it be if he came up with her? She would probably throw herself into the sea at his approach, she was so proud, so mistrustful of him. He got up at last and wandered about with the air of a man distraught. Every now and then he plucked a flower or picked up a shell and gazed at it as if it were of the most intense interest to him, but he was scarcely conscious of what he held in his hand. He felt neither hunger nor thirst, but after a time a strange feeling of exhaustion, of craving for sleep, came over him, and he dropped down just outside his hut and fell into a deep sleep.

It probably saved his reason and prepared him for the still heavier blow that Fate was to deal him.

He slept right through the night and past the dawn; and it was the sighed with callous indifference to his good fortune. Why had Fate not spared her instead of him—her so full of life and the joy of living? Why had it struck down so rare and beautiful a creature and left him to drag on an existence of anguish and futile remorse?

For a couple of days the weather remained fine, then the wind changed and grew rough. His cramped position, the solitude of the sea and the glare of its sun-flecked surface, which produced an almost intolerable burning of the eyes, began to tell upon him. His small supply of water was rapidly diminishing, and he had to put himself on short rations.

On the fourth day he caught himself holding snatches of conversation with Nina, but shook himself and tried to pull himself together; but again and again he relapsed into this form of delirium, and when the trading schooner, Eliza Anne, bound for the port of London, almost ran down the canoe, it picked up a half crazy man who laughed and cried in a breath and implored the captain with frantic gestures and broken accents, to put the ship about and search for "Nina."

The captain was a good-hearted fellow, and, thinking that there might be a basis of reason in the castaway's ravings, he hove about for some time in the latitude in which the canoe had been found, but he came across nothing to reward his humanity and while Mannering was prostrated in his bunk with brain fever, the Eliza Anne got on her course again and made for London.

Three months later Mannering was one night wandering along the Strand. It was just after eleven and the theatres were pouring out their crowds into the already congested thoroughfare. Mannering had not reached London destitute, for, all unprepared him for the still heavier blow that Fate was to deal him.

He slept right through the night and past the dawn; and it was the soughing of the wind and the harsh crash of the waves of the beach that awoke him. It had been raining heavily and he was wet through, but he did not feel cold, for fever was warning his blood with a baleful heat. As he stretched himself back came his misery with a sharp torture; and with a groan he dropped his arms to his side and looked round as if he were trying to persuade himself that it was a dream, and that he should see Nina coming swiftly toward him.

But instead of the vision of her fair, fresh grace and beauty, his burning eyes fell upon something on the beach. Long before he had reached it he saw what it was.

It was the raft, or rather the remains of it. The sail had gone, the mast was broken, half the logs had been torn away; the thing had been wrecked in the storm which had ragged while he slept, and the incoming tide had cast it at his feet.

And Nina! While he stared from the wrecked raft to the sea and back again from the sea to the raft a small object floating on the water caught his eye.

He fixed his gaze on it, beginning to tremble and shake, flung himself into the water and swam for the thing. When he came back with it clutched in his hand, his face was white and his eyes starting.

It was the little woollen cap Nina had worn.

Panting with his exertion and the agony that the assurance of her death caused him, he lay full length on the sand, his face upturned to the sun which broke out suddenly and mocked him pitilessly.

It was three days after this that in a dogged, sullen fashion he hauled the canoe down to the beach, and, putting in some provisions, made ready to sail. He was going, not because he had any desire for life or to go back to civilization, but because the island had become intolerable to him. You see, it was impossible to forget her in a place of which every feature kept her vividly, agonizingly in his memory, and he knew that if he remained any longer brooding, brooding over his loss and the tragic circumstances attending it that he must inevitably go mad. Once or twice, in his terrible solitude, a devil in his brain called "Suicide" had whispered alluringly to him. He was going because there was just enough of the spirit of a man left in him to make him shrink from insanity and self-destruction.

For the last time he wandered over the familiar scene, the exquisitely beautiful place which his dawning love had been rapidly transforming into Home; but it was a hell now. His lack-lustre eyes fell upon the heap of gold quartz which lay outside Nina's hut, but it did not keep his attention for a moment, and it never occurred to him to take even a specimen. Of what use was wealth to a man who had lost all hope in life and only craved a natural and painless death?

Instinct rather than any desire to choose a favorable time made him wait until the turn of the tide; then he got into his canoe and, keeping his gaze fixed seaward, set sail. The weather was more favorable to him than it had been to poor Nina, and carried him due south. Once or twice he thought how full of joy and hope he would have been if she had been with him in the boat, and he

the theatres were pouring out their crowds into the already congested thoroughfare. Mannering had not reached London destitute, for, all unconsciously, he had brought with him the small amount of money he had with him on the Alpina; but he had, since his disembarkation, lived with little regard for comfort or appearances; and as he moved slowly with the crowd he looked, in his old serge suit and weather-stained cap, so much like a tramp that now and again the policemen eyed him with something like suspicion and one had actually bidden him "move on."

Mannering obeyed mechanically, looking neither to the right nor the left, but drifting aimlessly with the crowd which surged along the wet pavement. The crush, the noise of the cabs and carriages, the shouts of the bus conductors and the talk and laughter of the people acted as a narcotic and soothed him after a fashion. But in the midst of the turmoil he could hear the boom of the sea on the sands of the island and hear Nina's voice calling to him "Dinner is ready!" or "Will you bring me some wood for the fire?" and the commonplace phrases took to themselves a mystic, sacred, significance.

How The Body Kills Germs.

Germs that get into the body are killed in two ways—by the white corpuscles of the blood, and by a germ-killing substance that is in the blood. Just what this substance is, we do not know. The blood of a healthy person always has some germ-killing substance in it to ward off the attack of disease. The fountain head of life is the stomach. A man who has a weak and impaired stomach and who does not properly digest his food will soon find that his blood has become weak and impoverished, and that his whole body is improperly and insufficiently nourished. To put the body in healthy condition, to feed the system on rich, red blood and throw out the poisons from the body, nothing in the past forty years has excelled Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a pure glyceric extract (without alcohol), of bloodroot, golden seal and Oregon grape root, stone root, mandrake and queen's root with black cherrybark.

J. L. MARTIN, ESQ.

"My husband was a sufferer from stomach trouble and impure blood," writes Mrs. JAMES H. MARTIN, of Frankfort, Ky. "He had a sore on his face that would form a scab which would dry and drop off in about a month, then another would immediately form. It continued this way for a long time. He tried every remedy that any one would suggest but found no relief. He then tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery which completely cured him. He has stayed cured now for two years, and I recommend this valuable medicine for impurities of the blood."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules.

Comedy In War.

Into the tragedy of war are inserted now and then bits of comedy and kindness.

During the Zulu War in South Africa an overwhelming force of natives was opposed to a little band of English sailors. From the Zulu host stepped forth a warrior laden with an ancient firearm, which he calmly mounted on a tripod in the open, while the sailors looked on, admiring his pluck, but wondering much what he proposed to do. At last one jovial tar suggested that their photographs were about to be taken, and by common consent no shots were fired.

Having loaded his piece with great deliberation, the Zulu primed it, sighted it, and, leaning hard upon it, fired. The recoil knocked him head over heels backward, while a great roar went up from the delighted sailors. He sat up, looking dazed, and then, the amusement over, he, with his countrymen charged, and were annihilated by a volley from the steadily aimed pieces of the little band of bluejackets.

During one of the many battles waged by the New Zealand Maoris against the British settlers the latter ran out of ammunition. At the moment when death seemed imminent a flag of truce appeared from the enemy's trenches, and messengers came forward with a supply of cartridges to enable the white men to continue fighting.

Lady's Historic Rejoinder.

Lady Blessington's rejoinder to Napoleon III. is historic. Napoleon, when an exile in London, was always a welcome guest of Lady Blessington's at Gore House. Shortly after his return to Paris, whilst his political prospects were still rather doubtful, her ladyship paid a visit to the French capital, and met Napoleon driving in the Bois de Boulogne.

The encounter was embarrassing, for the future Emperor of the French had shown himself anything but grateful for Lady Blessington's courtesy. He saluted her, however, with studied politeness, and inquired: "Countess, shall you stay long in Paris?" "I really cannot say," replied Lady Blessington, with a bewitching smile. "And you?" Such an ironical query, framed in two words so harmless in themselves, is a unique vindication of the assertion that ladies can, on occasion, realize that "brevity is the soul of wit."

THE ACQUISITION OF RICHES.

To get rich at all hazards, and to get rich quick if possible seems to be the object to which most men are bending their energies now-a-days. Even

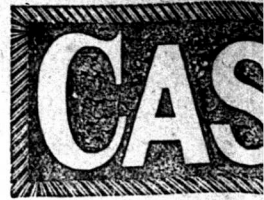

"The humble man out yonder who is working in the ditch, Has the hope within him hidden that some day he may be rich; And forgetting all the seasons that so foolishly were spent, He keeps hoping he may profit by some lucky accident."

If it were not so, many a man who is now able to prey upon the credulity of his fellows would be compelled to seek other employment. The Chief Post Office Inspector of the city of New York reports that last year "Members of the Suckers' List" lost seventy-seven millions of dollars investing in the get-rich-quick schemes; and it is safe to say that all the "suckers" were not caught on the other side of the line. The man who goes through life "taking a flyer" at this and that under the impression that he will some day "strike it rich" is in 999 times out of 1000 only wasting his money and making rapid preparation for an old age of humiliation and penury. The sooner he awakens to the fact that there is no certain short cut to riches, and that the "lucky accident" does not happen to one in one thousand, the better it will be for himself and his family. The only safe plan to adopt, if he hopes to have a competency in his old age, is to live within his income and to systematically lay up something from his earnings no matter how small the amount may be. If he is living beyond his means he should keep in mind Micawber's statement, which was something like this: "Income 20 shillings, expenditure 20 shillings and 6 pence, result misery; income 20 shillings and 6 pence, expenditure 20 shillings, result happiness. If he cannot do more, he should make absolutely certain of an old age of comfort and happiness, which he may do if he will avail himself of the opportunity presented by the Canadian Government Annuities Act, in regard to which information may be obtained at any Post Office or on application to the Superintendent of Annuities, Ottawa. There is no other plan for the purpose which will give him anything like the returns. So long as his present permanent abode is in Canada, whether he is naturalized or not, he is eligible to make the purchase.

On Saturday a bye-election was held in Owen Sound to fill five vacancies in the City Council caused by the unseating of the Mayor and four of the Aldermen. All the unseated members favored local prohibition; the result of the election is the return of four members opposed to it and one favorable. This leaves the standing of parties in the Council at ten to seven against prohibition. As the majorities were small the only thing certain about the outcome of the contest is that the local option fight will be carried on with the bitterness and determination that have marked the elections of the past few years.

Sir Wilfrid never had a better vindication from any of his friends than he received from his political enemies when Messrs. The case of the Spain boy at Mimico School who was chained to his bed and fed on bread and water for weeks was an isolated one, the superintendent says. But this does not lessen the abuse, except in degree. An institution that can inflict this sort of punishment upon a mere lad calls for Government action quite as surely as if it had inflicted the same injustice to a dozen or a hundred boys.

Ottawa Citizen.

Mr. Bourassa is reported as saying among other things that "if the west is to be kept in allegiance with this nation, we must make the French-Canadian feel at home, not only in his own preserve of Quebec, but everywhere he can be induced to carry his spirit of loyalty and attachment to this country." Meaning thereby, as the lawyers would say, that this country has got to have bi-lingual schools and a dual language throughout its length and breadth if the north-west is to be kept in allegiance. What the allegiance of the north-west has to do with bi-lingual schools and a dual language it would be difficult to discover. We have been hearing recently a good deal about the allegiance of the north-west and the talk may amount to nothing or to something, but it certainly has nothing to do with bi-lingual schools and dual language, which the west does not want and would not tolerate.

Fatal Fire Incendiary?

Niagara Falls, Ont., March 19.—Coroner Wilson last night opened an inquest into the circumstances surrounding the deaths of Mrs. Charlotte Pattison and her daughter Melta, who lost their lives when the building in which they had apartments was destroyed Sunday. The jury viewed the bodies and adjourned to take the evidence later.

Miss Ella Pattison, who suffered severely from inhaling smoke while endeavoring to rescue her sister, is practically out of danger at the General Hospital. A most rigid investigation of the conflagration will be conducted, the authorities being determined to ascertain whether the blaze was accidental or incendiary. Many citizens incline to the latter belief.

Push Out the Chest.

Look at your figure in the next full length mirror you see, says the Woman's World. Nine chances out of ten your chest curves in, your shoulders round like a bow, your stomach protrudes, and your chin is thrust forward like a prizefighter's. Now make an experiment. Take a long breath, push your chest out and hold it to that position. Behold a miracle! Your shoulders straighten till your back is like a line, your stomach retreats, and your chin assumes a position of modest dignity. Now you are standing correctly, and if you place any value at all upon a good appearance you must practice this position until it becomes second nature. Remember that the grand secret is, "Push out the chest." The rest of the figure will take care of itself.

The Seeing Eye.

I know a man who has lived on one farm half a century. He sleeps in the room in which he was born. He knows every rod of his farm in the dark. Yet his lambs and his pigs, the velvet roll of new sprouting wheat, the procession of the seasons, the apple trees he planted and has watched for years—all are new to him each day. I have seen him stand and look at his sheep as if he were a city man long shut out from such sights. A sunset or a sunrise is to him a miracle new performed each day. Rabbit Skins For Hats.

Many useful industries have firmly rooted themselves in Sydney during the past decade, but none had progressed so rapidly as that connected with the manufacture of hats and caps. In 1900 there were ten small factories, employing in all 280 hands. Now there are thirty-two factories employing 1,400 hands. The chief interest in the trade centres in the production of felts. In this business fur comes first. The rabbit supplants the sheep because of the superiority of the fur for felt-hat making over the finest merino. Millions of rabbit skins are used annually. It takes the fur of about six average skins to make a fur felt hat. In one factory the consumption of skins ranges from 25,000 to 30,000 per week. There are now probably not less than 500,000 felt hats made in New South Wales each year.

"You ought to have one, you know," Sir Joseph said earnestly.

"But why on earth should I have a bishop?" asked the agitated editor.

"Because, my dear sir," Sir Joseph explained smoothly "many of your newspaper's statements need confirmation so badly!"

PICTURE JUNGLE HUNTING.

Getting Moving Pictures of Tigers is an Exciting Business.

Photographing the tiger in his native jungle must be an exciting sport, judging from the accounts of Cherry Kearton, who has just returned to London after visiting India and Borneo. Mr. Kearton gives the following account of how he cinematographed a large tiger.

"It took me twenty days before I could find the tiger, though tiger sport was plentiful. The tiger I got had seized a bullock by the nose and had dragged him on all fours into dense jungle, forming a tunnel by doing so.

"I went on my hands and knees along part of this tunnel, and found one of the legs of the bullock newly eaten.

"So I returned and arranged a drive with 400 men, cleared a space in the jungle fifteen yards wide where the tiger was to be driven, put up a thin leaf screen to hide me from the beast and waited on the ground—not up a tree—for him.

"I had no firearms, but I had three spearmen lying on the ground beside me. Photographs taken from a tree would not give the true result.

"I waited there for half an hour. I knew that the tiger was approaching by the beaters, who were up trees, tapping like woodpeckers. The others were on the ground, making hideous sounds with every noisy thing they possessed.

"The tiger came down the tunnel and out into the open, and I photographed him. Directly he got half way across he gave vent to a number of most terrible coughs.

"When he had gone the game ranger, a native, who was on the ground beside me, got up and said, 'That tiger is over eleven feet long, the biggest tiger I have ever seen.'

"The natives wanted to kill the tiger, since it was about to become a man eater; stealing village cattle is always the sign that that is going to happen. They could not understand why I only wanted to turn a handle at the animal.

"Fifteen men, saying that they would be his next victims, got behind a bush with spears, and when the tiger was driven up to them three of the men rushed out with their weapons.

"The tiger leaped from the dense jungle, the man on the right and the man on the left bolted, the man in the middle turned to emulate them, but fell on his face.

"Upon him the tiger threw himself with his claws in his shoulder like a flash of lightning, and put his head down to the back of the man's neck.

The White Elephant Party the Latest Social and Charitable Fad—Something Like a Rummage Sale, Though

Dear Elsa—Of course Dick and I took in the automobile show which was recently held at Madison Square Garden. I am wonderfully interested in motor modes and fashions, but one feels like putting down the brakes and going slow after an hour or so spent at the exhibition. There is no place in which to rest one's weary bones, except to sit in one of the cars, and that's such a conspicuous place of vantage, and one's head, my, how it does go whirling after watching the cars whiz around the track!

You know, dear, that nowadays there are fashionable shades in autos. There are some tones that stay in, for instance, somber colors for general practical use, but most of the cars at the show were wearing their new spring suits, regular Easter day parade effects. Pale lavender was one of the leading colors, and if that isn't a real Easter color I don't know what is. Pearl gray cars were much in evidence, but the swagger Easter frocks will go in the all white and cream cars. I never saw so many of them before, especially in limousines.

But if I were going to buy a new auto I should be tempted to purchase a very dark violet machine. This color is shown in a number of makes and has replaced in my affections the dark hunter's greens that are also well played up. The emeralds and light grass greens, scarlets and crushed raspberries and the other light ones are too bright for my taste, but I was told that they would be all the rage. Imagine having to live up to a salmon tinted motor, though, or a cerise or a vivid green! For you know it is the proper caper to get your motor in one of the fashionable shades first and choose your coats and veils to match.

This vagary is possible only for persons who can afford a car every year or so. Indeed, you would want one a month for such capriciousness. I've just thought of a scheme for the "don't know what to do with their money" autoists. Let them have a regular seasonable procession of cars. Let's see—in January a snow white would be appropriate. I think a dark red one would feel cozy in February, and the gray days of March would suggest a dull gray motor. For April and Easter, as I said, there would be the gay lavenders. Then in May one of those crushed strawberry effects would come in nicely with the early berries, and a real American Beauty red would do well for the month of roses. For patriotic July there might be a blue car—blue is fashionable—with a border line of red and a monogram in white—the national colors, you see. In real summer weather, in August, a cool vanilla ice cream would

Sunday Amusements Law.

Sunday amusements in London are under the control of the London County Council, and hedged round with many restrictions. For instance, a Sunday entertainment must be in aid of some charity, and the whole of the proceeds, less expenses, must go to the charity.

Then the manager of the theatre or hall where the entertainment is given is not allowed to have anything to do with engaging the artistes or anyone employed in connection with the entertainment. The law says that all arrangements must be made by the officials of the charity concerned.

Lastly, the London County Council expressly enacts that no pressure, direct or indirect, is put upon anyone to perform or work on Sunday.

These provisions are designed to protect artistes and others, but it is a widespread grievance among members of the entertainment world that they are constantly evaded.

Sailor's Invitation.

The present Lord Liverpool succeeded his father four years ago. The late Earl of Liverpool was one of the few peers who have seen active service as a naval officer. In the war with the Maoris in 1862 he was one of the naval brigade at the storming of Rangiriri.

During that affair one of the sailors, named Sergeant, climbed to the top of the stockade and commenced to lead and fire his musket at any of the enemy to be seen. He was ordered by the future Earl of Liverpool, then Lord Foljambe, to get down into safety, but the gallant fellow coolly replied, "Oh, no, your honor. Here's the place to see 'em. Come up here."

It was afterwards found that the man's cap had been shot off, his coat shot through in four places, and the pallisade on which he sat riddled through and through, yet Sergeant himself was quite unhurt.

Tight Collars and Gray Hair.

Wear a loose collar and live long in the enjoyment of luxuriant and unfading locks. This is the prospect that Dr. Walter G. Walford holds out in The British Medical Journal. Answering a correspondent's inquiry as to the cause of his hair changing color, the doctor says: "The probable cause is that the inquirer has not very long since enlarged his neckwear and thus improved the communication between his heart and brain and the lymphatic circulation. This is what I happened to do when I had just reached seventy, when, in addition to greatly improved health, my hair not only became darker, but grew so profusely where I had previously been bald as to become quite noticeable."

Carried Off Dickens' Debris.

Everybody knew Dickens. He could not dine in public without attracting attention. When he left the dining room his admirers would descend upon his table and carry off eggshells, orange peels and other things that remained behind so that they might have memorials of this great and much loved writer.

middle turned to emulate them, but fell on his face.

"Upon him the tiger threw himself with his claws in his shoulder like a flash of lightning, and put his head down to the back of the man's neck.

"I, six to eight feet up a tree, shouted, thinking he was going to bite through the man's spinal column. The beast looked up at me, gave another of his great coughs, growled savagely at me, and then jumped sideways and disappeared into the jungle."

Culinary Makeshifts.

For canning, preserving or making jelly, underripe fruit is preferable to that which is too ripe. It not only has a finer flavor, but keeps better and will jell more surely.

A variation of mashed potatoes is made by boiling turnips with the potatoes and mashing both together. The turnips should be put on first, as they take longer to cook.

If there is cold chicken left from the roast cut it into dice, mix with a cream dressing, put in the baking dish, sprinkle the top with cheese and stuffed olives and bake in a quick oven until brown.

Extra crab meat for which there are no shells is delicious dressed with Hollandaise sauce and served on round croutons. Shreds of red peppers sprinkled on top just as the crab is served makes it more artistic.

Canned peaches left from one day's dessert are delicious put in individual deep pie molds and baked with strips of rich pie dough across the top. Put a lump of butter in the bottom of the dish and sprinkle sugar and cinnamon on top of the peaches.

roses. For patriotic July there might be a blue car—blue is fashionable—with a border line of red and a monogram in white—the national colors, you see. In real summer weather, in August, a cool vanilla ice cream would be chosen—that is exactly what one car looked like. For September days, when leaves begin to turn brown, one of those soft brown motors would do and for October the purple tone would be most appropriate. There is a regular pumpkin yellow that is hideous but modish that could fit in for November and Thanksgiving day, and, finally, in December a deep holly green with trimmings of red would carry a suggestion of Christmas. Then next year there would be a new gamut of colors from which to make a selection.

But to be serious and to change the subject, why don't you have a white elephant party the next time you entertain the amusement club? This elephant party is the latest in social and charitable fads. As you know, anything of the white elephant order may be whatever is useless to the owner, from real estate to hatpins. So those who are invited to the party select something which they consider undesirable—a new pair of gloves which are too small or too large; a collar which is unbecoming; a bowknot in tone with the complexion; an ornament that has become distasteful to the owner; a book which has a duplicate. If the affair is for charity the articles are laid out and moderately priced, and then the affair is of the nature of a high class rummage sale.

If it is simply a social affair the packages are wrapped up and drawn for, and if the guests wish to change off with one another they are at liberty to do so.

Here's the recipe for an emergency dessert I've found very good and useful. It is called by the woman who invented it "cream surprise." One of its advantages is that if the materials called for are not at hand others may be substituted. Marshmallows cut with scissors into small squares, cut-up candied cherries, broken nuts, crumbled macaroons, sherry according to the amount of dessert required and whipped cream are the usual ingredients, but bits of cake or lady fingers can be used in place of the macaroons, and if candied cherries are not handy a few chopped seedless raisins or chopped figs will do as well. English walnuts are perhaps the nicest nuts to use. The marshmallows, nuts, cherries and macaroons are soaked for an hour or so in sherry and just before serving folded through the whipped cream. The dessert is served either in individual dishes with a cherry or a few nuts on top or in a large bowl. Yours devotedly.

Some Blunders of Great

Peel was terribly punished and 1846 for two mistakes wily leaders are very prone to in all ages—he overlooked a genius because he did not, and he changed his opinion capital question without a party into his confidence.

If Peel had given Disraeli in his Government, and it called his party together and told them he had changed about the Corn Laws, he would probably have been in office remainder of his life. But he like Disraeli; his prim English shuddered at the foreign appearance, and he chose to party know that he had changed policy by an announcement Times.

It was the same mistake that stone made in 1886. He change his mind about him without telling his party, and ignored Mr. Chamberlain. It same mistake that Mr. Chamberlain made in 1903, when, with previous warning, he decided tariff reform.

Both Gladstone and Mr. Chamberlain had long resolved upon change of policy, in their own but they both sprung the change on their followers without notice, and English gentlemen stand that.—Saturday Review

PRESENTATION AND ADDRESS.

Yarker, March 15th, 1912.

MRS. EGERTON L. VANLUVEN:

Dear Friend and Leader,—We, the members of your choir, together with your pastor, embrace this opportunity to place upon record our high appreciation of you as a painstaking and efficient leader of song in our Yarker Methodist choir and congregation.

We do not forget the many years of gratuitous service rendered by you in the improvement of the service of song in behalf of the church of our choice and love.

We deem it a duty we owe our christian manhood and womanhood to come here in person and express in our own words our heartfelt gratitude for all you have done and attempted in your capacity for our church choir and Sunday School. We wish for you and your family many years of health, happiness and prosperity and may you be long spared to enjoy your chosen loved service of song. As a small token of the esteem in which you are held by us, we ask you to accept this music rack, not for its intrinsic value, but for the love that promoted the gift. We would close with this prayer to our common Lord that our lives and service may flow on in endless song above earth's lamentations until that day when we join the choir triumphant and together sing the song of Paradise.

Signed: Rev. J. S. McMullen, C. J. Shultz, J. E. Connolly, M. N. Storms, Lilly McMullen, F. M. Lovelace, F. E. Joyner, Ella Smith, Edgar Walker, R. P. Lochead, Claten Smith, Lena Crabter, Earl Cummings, Frank Simpkins, Arthur Hart, Arthur Irish.

JEWESS IS MURDERED

Rebecca Cooper Is Dead and Her Slayer Is at Large.

Young Austrian Is Shot Down by an Unknown Man at the Door of Her Lodging in the Ward, Toronto—Albert Berger Who Came With Woman From Montreal Is Detained For Investigation—Landlady, Too.

Toronto, March 26.—Rebecca Cooper, 32 years of age, an Austrian Jewess, rooming at 60 Chestnut street, was shot and instantly killed by a man whose identity is as yet unknown, at eight o'clock last night. The Cooper woman came to Toronto ten days ago from Montreal, and went to live at the Chestnut street address with Mrs. Sarah Cohen. Last night she went out to a nearby store and had just returned with a small parcel of eggs, when she went out again to the door and was heard there talking to a man. The man proposed that they go out and spend the evening. She refused his invitation, her answer showing considerable resentment. The man was heard to say that if she would not go with him he would shoot her. She persisted in her refusal, and a moment later a shot was heard.

Patrol Sergt. Luiton and Policeman McLeod were in Elm street station when they heard a scream and saw people running. Hurrying to the doorway of the Chestnut street house, they found Mrs. Cohen with the dying girl supported in her arms. Dr. Johnston of Elm street was called, but the girl was dead before he arrived.

While the police were in the house, Albert Berger, 34 years old, an Austrian Jew, crowded into the room where the body lay. He declared that he was the girl's brother, and that they had come to Toronto together from Montreal. He said he was a jeweler. He was taken to the Agnes street station upon a charge of vagrancy, and when searched a revolver was found upon him. It was empty, and showed no signs of having been discharged recently. It was a very small weapon. Later he was taken to the detective office and subjected to a diligent questioning, after which he was taken back to the Agnes street station and held in custody.

From some boys about the house it was learned that the man, after firing his weapon point blank in the woman's face, ran north and turned into a lane which runs west to Centre avenue. No further clues have yet been found, although a number of detectives are at work.

The girl was shot through the mouth, the bullet coming out at the back of the head. The body was removed to the morgue, and the chief coroner was notified and will hold an inquest to-day.

Later the man who had given his name as Berger admitted to the police that his name was Cohen, and that the dead woman was not his sister, but that they had been living together.

Mrs. Cohen, keeper of the house, was also held on a vagrancy charge.

LIFE-LONG MEMBERSHIP

BROOKFIELD AND SPENCER AT COLLEGE TOGETHER.

The New British Censor and the Lord Chamberlain Who Appointed Him Are Old Comrades—They Were Enthusiastic Amateur Actors at Cambridge — Spencer Made a Hit In Women's Parts In Those Days.

Some interesting coincidences are disclosed in The Daily Chronicle concerning the appointment by the Lord Chamberlain of Mr. Charles Brookfield, as censor in Great Britain, or "reader of plays," as the post is officially described.

"Now," says The Daily Chronicle, "the whole mystery is cleared up. The real reason does credit, at any rate, to the Lord Chamberlain's fidelity to old comrades, for it is just a case of 'auld lang syne.' Lord Spencer and Mr. Brookfield were at Cambridge together. They were at the same college—Trinity. They were both of them active and acting members of the Cambridge University Amateur Dramatic Club, appearing together in quite a number of plays between the years 1877 and 1879.

"In one play in particular they won considerable applause as man and wife. This play was a farce called 'A

ASQUITH FAILS AGAIN.

Prime Minister Unable to Get a Strike Settlement.

London, March 26.—The 25th day of the national coal strike ends with nearly 3,000,000 workers idle, many thousands dependent upon charity to keep them from starvation, every manufacturing industry in the land undergoing a throttling, and a settlement apparently as remote as ever.

The sanguine expectations at the beginning of the day that the joint conference of coal owners and miners, dramatically summoned by the Premier, would reach an agreement that would end the struggle were replaced by the gloomiest forebodings, when it was learned that no joint conference had been held. For two and a half hours the Prime Minister and his colleagues labored with the committee representing the coal owners, and for four hours and a half with the miners' executive, but they failed so completely to secure concessions from either which would afford a basis for agreement between them, that it was found inadvisable to bring the disputants together again.

As in previous crises in the situation, the Government resorts to mystifying secrecy, the only information vouchsafed in the official statement issued last evening being: "The conference adjourned until to-morrow."

Much significance is attached to the speech of Viscount Haldane, the War Secretary, at the dinner of the Fishmongers, when, having said that it was the duty of the state to preserve law and order, he added: "We have no right, we have no power to make 850,000 miners go to work—it is for them to choose. On the other hand if there are those among them who desire to work, it is our duty to secure to them the liberty to do so."

Back to Scottish Mines.

Glasgow, March 26.—A general breakaway of the miners from the strike movement seems probable in Scotland, where 1,000 men resumed work in the pits of Bellshill, Lanarkshire, yesterday morning.

In other pits also there was a considerable resumption of work.

"Boots and Saddles."

The milking call of "boots and saddles" is really a corruption of the old French phrase "boute-selle"—"put on your saddle"—from "bouter," to put or place, and "selle," saddle. The medieval saddles were of such cumbersome and heavy make that they were taken off the horses whenever possible. In Malvern's "Peveril's Favorite" of 1524 occurs the phrase "the trumpets sound of bout-selle."

In 1763 Steele wrote in The Tatler, "The sound was current to 'boots and saddles' but it seems probable that the phrase ran in its present form long before that date, as it is commonly used during the civil war and the French wars, and even in the old ballads of the time. It would seem that the phrase was introduced into the English language by the French."

"In view of the Lord Chamberlain's latest action in refusing to license a suffrage play in favor of peace, it is interesting to note that in earlier days feminine parts were his regular line, and from all accounts he inspired them with considerable piquancy and sprightly charm.

"As to 'The Fearful Tragedy in Seven Dials'—the play in which both the Lord Chamberlain and the present censor were so intimately concerned together—it is, unfortunately, a vulgar and suggestive little farce.

"The part played by the censor was that of a bibulous husband who wakes up in the morning with 'a mouth like a lime kiln,' and finds someone sleeping on the sofa, and is afraid that his wife will find out. On his asking the sleeping figure to go he finds out that it is really a man whom he did not know, and who had been drunk in his company.

"These, then, are the memories on the strength of which Mr. Brookfield has been considered the worthiest man possible to scrutinize the plays of Shaw and Pinero, Barrie and Galsworthy!"

As a matter of fact, Mr. Brookfield's own published "Reminiscences" are not without interest in the same connection.

"I achieved," he says, "no scholarly distinction at Cambridge, and went on the stage because it appeared to be the only craft which one was paid to learn." This, perhaps, was modesty on Mr. Brookfield's part, for, at any rate, he found time to tie for the Winchester Reading Prize with Dr. Ryle. The qualification for this consisted in being able to read aloud a page from Hooker's Sermons, a portion of the Old Testament, and piece of Shakespeare.

An Old Custom.

Lord Powis, who has sold 1,800 acres of his Montgomeryshire estate to his tenants, is an excellent all-round sportsman, and is a descendant of Lord Clive of Plassey, who won for the Empire the dominion of India, routing with 3,000 men, on the famous June 23, 1757, the Surajah Dowlah with his horde of troops—70,000 strong. On his return he became M.P. for Shrewsbury, and died finally by his own hand in 1774.

In addition to Powis Castle, the family country seat since the days of Queen Elizabeth, Lord Powis has a house in Berkeley square, which is one of the last to retain the old custom of displaying the owner's name on a plate on the door.

A Manx Custom.

Waldron in his "Description of the Isle of Man" relates a curious way the people of that country have of ushering in Christmas. On the 24th of December the servants have a general holiday. They go to church at midnight, and when the prayers are over they go in search of a wren. After finding the poor little bird it is killed, laid on a bier and taken to the parish church, where it is buried with great solemnity during the singing of dirges in the Manx language. After these ceremonies Christmas begins.

The picturesque village of Molesworth, Huntingdon, Eng., possesses an unusual cemetery. It has been established about seven years and up to date there have been interred about 200 pets, mostly dogs, although there are a few birds, about 50 cats, a marmot and four monkeys. The place is beautifully kept, the graves being planted with flowers, while the stones and curbs are principally of white marble with suitable inscriptions.

A coroner's jury is investigating.

A Peace Offering.

Paris, March 26.—The plans of France to give practical expression of her friendship for the United States, are completed. The new steamship France, which on April 23 will start to New York, will convey an official delegation of Frenchmen, bearing Auguste Rodin's bronze bust of "La France." This will be presented to the United States, to be placed at the base of the monument which will be dedicated next June to Samuel de Champlain.

A Gypsy Prophecy.

An English magazine relates a curious instance of gypsy prophecy. The third Earl of Malmesbury, as Lord Fitzharris, was riding to a yeomanry review near Christchurch when his orderly, some distance in front, ordered a gypsy woman to open a gate. The gypsy woman quietly waited till Lord Fitzharris and his staff rode up, when she addressed them, saying, "Oh, you think you are a lot of fine fellows now, but I can tell you that one day your bones will whiten in that field." Lord Fitzharris laughed and asked her whether she thought they were going to have a battle, adding it was not very likely in that case they would choose such a spot. More than forty years later the field was turned into a cemetery.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, March 25.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market the receipts of live stock for the week ending March 23 were 1100 cattle, 75 sheep and lambs, 1170 hogs and 1450 calves. The offerings on the market this morning amounted to 700 cattle, 50 sheep and lambs, 900 hogs and 400 calves.

The gathering of buyers on the market was large, and, as they were all pretty well cleaned out of beef, the demand was good and a fairly active trade was done. On account of the short run and the limited supply of good steers, some of the packers were obliged to go to Toronto at the latter end of last week and buy several carloads, for which they paid from $6.15 to $6.90 per 100 pounds, f.o.b. In consequence, the demand from them to-day was limited, owing to the high prices demanded for the quality of the stock offered.

Several full loads of steers, weighing from 1050 to 1100 pounds, changed hands at $7 per 100 pounds, and few odd picked lots of the same quality sold as high as $7.15, while top quality cows and bulls brought $6, but if choice steers, weighing 1250 to 1300 pounds, had been obtainable, $7.25 to $7.35 could have been made for them.

The undertone to the market for hogs continues very strong and prices have scored another advance of 15c to 20c per 100 pounds since last Wednesday, making a net rise since this day week of 50c to 75c, and the prospects are that they will go still higher in the future, as supplies thruout the country are, no doubt, scarce when these high figures fall to bring them out. The offerings on spot this morning were small, for which the demand was good, and an active trade was done, with sales of selected lots at $8.60 to $8.75 per 100 pounds, weighed off cars. The tone of the market for lambs was strong, and prices scored a further advance of 25c per 100 pounds.

Butchers' cattle, choice, $7.25 to $7.35; do., medium, $7.50 to $8.50; do., common, $4 to $5; do., choice cows, $5.50 to $6; do., medium, $4.50 to $5; do., bulls, $4 to $6; milkers, choice, each, $65 to $70; do., common and medium, each, $50 to $60; springers, $30 to $40.

LAMP CHIMNEYS.

They Get the Habit of Breaking Without Apparent Reason.

The wisest hardware man is put to it to account reasonably for the fashion in which lamp chimneys will snap at untoward times. It seems absurd to attribute it to geological formation of the ground, but it is a fact that in one house built on easily vibrating made ground the student lamp chimneys would crack loudly in the middle of the morning when the trolley car came around the street corner half a block away. They were of the best make obtainable, and when the dealer was appealed to he said he was unable to prevent the same thing happening in the store, where the chimneys stood on the shelves, quite without pressure from burner at the base.

The little, slender student lamp chimneys seem the more liable to this sort of accident, and when they have "the habit" it pays to buy them by the half dozen or dozen, thereby getting them at a reduction. Then put them on the fire in a big kettle of cold water and bring it to a boil. The water should cool with the chimneys in it. After this wash and lay them away on a shelf, each wrapped in soft tissue paper. The treatment toughens the glass, and a clean chimney is always ready in case of emergency.

Not every young housewife knows that a lamp chimney washed in soapy water will never look clear. Held under clear running hot water and wiped quickly and thoroughly there will be no cloudiness when it is lighted. Soft old cheesecloth or silkoline makes the most perfect cloth for drying lamp chimneys, and generous pieces should be kept for that use alone.

ENGLISH SCHOOLS.

Most Founded For Poor Scholars—Are Now Aristocratic.

Some of Britain's great public schools have interesting histories of their own, dating back hundreds of years.

When the Charterhouse School was founded in 1611 by Thomas Sutton it had a different name. It was called "Howard House" when Sutton purchased it for the then very large sum of $65,000, and it was not even as a school that it was first founded, but as a hospital.

The letters patent which Sutton obtained enabled him to found "a hospital for eighty old men and forty boys," under the name of the "Hospital of King James in Charterhouse."

The former portion of the original institution remains in London. It is an asylum for eighty "poor brethren." Each has a room of his own, and an allowance of about $180 a year for clothes and pocket money. But the school was removed in 1872 to Godalming, in Surrey, and from its original forty boys has grown to 460.

Charterhouse, though of respectable antiquity, is not by any means the oldest of our great public schools. That honor belongs to Winchester, which was founded in 1387 by the famous William of Wykeham.

The life of the Winchester boy used to be hard beyond belief. Until the time of Queen Elizabeth their beds consisted simply of some straw lying down on the hard concrete floor. Their plates were small squares of board, which are still used for bread-

THE WHITE HOUSE

Madison's Part In Giving the White House Its Name

Just how the White House got its name is a question which historians differ. A historian in Washington thinks the burden of proof tends to give the name to President Madison.

The structure was made of red river freestone, and the capitol was built of the same stone. When the British burned the mansion they did a lot of other things, and the country was poor money to repair the same. The mansion was only slightly damaged, other than being black smoke. Money was scarce, so Congress made an appropriation for the outside of the house painted white was selected as the best color. In a letter to a person named Madison wrote: "Come in and see me time. You will always find me in the White House."

The executive mansion was then called the White House at that time, but this investigation

HORSES IN COLD WEATHER.

Harm Comes to Them Only When Permitted to Become Wet.

In operating my farm of 1,280 acres I need at least thirty head of horses, says a North Dakota correspondent of Orange Judd Farmer. There is little trouble in keeping them in good condition during the winter. I never have had trouble of any kind. The cheapest feeds are oats and flax straw and native hay with oats as our grain. Every barn should have good ventilation and rinsed, press as much of the water out as possible. Add the following mixture to the flesh side: Common salt and ground alum, one-fourth ounce each, and one-half ounce of borax dissolved in one quart of hot water. When sufficiently cool to work with the hand, add enough rye meal to make a thick paste. Spread the mixture on the flesh side, fold and let remain in a shady, airy place for two weeks, then remove the paste and wash. When nearly dry, scrape the flesh side thoroughly with a dull knife, during the winter. I never had trouble of any kind. The cheapest feeds are oats and flax straw and native hay with oats as our grain. Every barn should have good ventilation and plenty of light. I always turn all horses out during the day. In the winter they find protection around the big strawstacks. This is sufficient to keep them in good condition no matter how cold it is. They are always turned into the lot no matter if the temperature drops to thirty degrees below zero, providing, of course, it is not storming. Dry cold is not injurious, and it is only when horses get wet that harm results.

Attention should be given to the fitting of harness to colts when beginning to work. It is of great importance that collars should fit snugly, and it is well to see that the shoulders are not bruised. When first beginning work in the spring the work should be light until the team is hardened. During the first day the distance of ten miles traveling is sufficient. This may be increased to twelve to eighteen miles as soon as the team gets into condition.

Suckling colts should be very well taken care of. The stables should be tight so that no wind gets in through cracks. Light should be admitted through windows. The suckling colts should be kept by themselves during the winter, as the others usually crowd them out of shelter. Colts require more warmth or shelter than work horses or brood mares. When they get wet it is quite serious.

TANNING SKINS.

Directions For Making Best Use of the Prey of Gun or Trap.

Many a boy who has been successful with trap or gun would be glad to save some of the fur skins secured as a souvenir or for some purpose, such as making lap robes, rugs, etc. He is quite often prevented from doing this because of the expense when the work is done by a skilled tanner or else by the lack of knowledge of how to do it himself.

There are several processes by which hides may be tanned with the fur on, but the following is about as cheap and handy as any:

Wash the hide in warm water, remove all flesh matter from the inner surface and loose dirt from the hair side. Now wash in strong, rather warm soapsuds. The old fashioned soft soap made from wood ashes is best. Either rub by hand or gently on a washboard. As soon as thoroughly cleansed and first.—Farm and Fireside.

Talk problems over with your neighbor and ask his support in building up the schools, improving the roads and in getting the community organized for social and economic betterment.

Among the Chickens.

Don't tie up the top of the grit sack just because the hens are out on the ground. They cannot get much grit themselves, and what they do get is not sharp enough to do the necessary grinding.

A combination of high roosts and heavy fowls seldom proves satisfactory. Lame birds will surely result. Wide perches, not over two feet from the floor, are the best for the heavy breeds.

One good way to keep insect pests down is to give the birds all the dust they need to roll in. Just try that and see how they will "second your motion" by rolling every day and many times a day.

Dust which is used for poultry should not be left too long in the houses. It gets old and perhaps infested with insects, so that it will defeat the purpose for which it is placed in the boxes.

A flat stone and a hammer are all the tools necessary to manufacture grit from the pieces of broken crockery and dishes which accumulate more or less around every home. The pieces can be pounded fine for chick grit or coarse for the older birds.—Farm and Fireside.

The Rabbi's Wit.

Chief Rabbi Adler was gifted with a ready wit as the two following stories prove. He was once seated next to a cardinal with whom he was on friendly terms—possibly it was Manning. "When shall I have the pleasure of seeing you eat ham, Chief Rabbi?" asked the cardinal. "At your eminence's wedding," was the prompt reply. "You are the prince of beggars," one of the Rothschilds said to him on one occasion. "I am a beggar of princes," was the neat reply.

A Double Flounder.

A double-sided flounder, both sides being marked alike, with duplicate fins, and having a misplaced eye, was recently caught in English waters.

time of Queen Elizabeth their beds consisted simply of some straw hung down on the hard concrete floor. Their plates were small squares of board, which are still used for bread-and-butter.

It was at Winchester that the system of "monitors," or prefects, now usual in all large schools, first originated. There were twenty monitors, and these alone were allowed to have fags.

Winchester boys, of whom there were at first only seventy, entered on the understanding that they must "learn, leave, or be flogged with a four-twiggied rod." The school has grown enormously since those early days, and now has about 450 scholars.

Next in point of antiquity to Winchester comes Eton, the largest of all our public schools. Henry VI., who founded Eton about 1441, called it "The College of the Blessed Mary of Eton beside Windsor." Some of the school buildings date from that period.

Sir Laurence Sherriff, who founded Rugby in 1567, was a warden of the Grocers' Company. In an inventory of gifts received by Queen Elizabeth on New Year's Day, 1562, occurs, "By Laurence Shref, grocer, a sugar loaf, a box of ginger, a box of nutmegs, and a pound of cinnamon."

Queen Bess, with shrewd humor, gave the good grocer a crest and coat-of-arms, "a branch of dates held in a lion's paw erased." The present school, the Old Manor House of Rugby, was bought by the trustees in 1748.

It was the great Arnold, who came to Rugby from Winchester, who changed the school from the roughest and most turbulent to one of the best in England. "Tom Brown's School-days," the finest school story ever written, gives a wonderful picture of Rugby under his strong but kindly sway. Judge Hughes, who wrote it, was at Rugby for eight years and a half.

Haileybury, though not old as schools go, has an interesting history. It was built in 1806 by the East India Company to train cadets for their service.

Sixpenny Parliamentary Votes.

The very cheapest way of becoming a member of the British Parliament is to stand for an English University as an unopposed candidate. Indeed, at the last general election the two members for Cambridge University only spent £18 5s. 6d. between them.

But, on the other hand, enormous sums may be spent. For example, it cost Sir John A. Simon nearly $14,000 to win his seat at Walthamstow; but Mr. Gwynn's seat for Galway cost him only $550.

The cost of the last election was nearly $5,000,000. But although the average cost of 5,235,323 votes recorded averaged 3s. 8d., some of those who aspired to sit "neath the shadow of Big Ben at Westminster went a long way above or a great deal below this sum.

Each vote obtained by Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, for instance, cost him 6d., and Mr. P. Snowden had to pay 8d. The candidate who stood for East St. Pancras in the Suffragist interest only secured 22 votes, which cost him £375 13s. 3d., or £17 1s. 6d. each; while another unsuccessful gentleman paid £9 11s. 4d. for each of the 35 votes he secured.

A MEAL FOR A TIGER

The Ram Was a Fighter, Too. Furnished a Surprise.

Nature has made the tiger in the combination of speed, cunning, daring and physical strength. A tiger's first bounds are so quick that he can bring it alongside an antelope before its paw will touch a bull. It has been known to scale a wall five feet high into a cage and to jump back with a fatal animal in its jaws. Sport hunters have known it to carry bait while they were putting shelters from which to shoot.

It is a fact, however, that makes no pretense to invincibility, as may be seen in the battle of one kept in the Calcutta gardens, which was butted to a ram. A soldier owned a ram, which became so troublesome that he had to be sent to the zoo. It caused so much annoyance that he decided to give it to the great tiger.

The tiger was so ferocious that he was let down through a sliding in the roof of its cage. He was lowered down. The tiger in one corner, saw the ram and, rising, began to stretch. The ram, not knowing he was in for food for the big beast, and stretching was the signal for the tiger. Stepping nimbly back to the corner of the cage, it put its head and went straight at the ram and in a few minutes but death.—New York Press.

A Little Something For the Waiter

"The biggest tip I ever saw" waiter in my life was bestowed late John W. Gates in Parliament who is accustomed to be in that line himself. "Gates" gained a party of about a dozen at dinner at the Ritz hotel the little private dining room right as you go toward the rear. Before the meal was finished called for Olivier, the head waiter. John never did succeed in getting man's name right.

"Olivier," he said, "here's something for you," and he handed a 1,000 franc note ($200). He was foolish and that he was doing things for the rest of the evening. He guessed he knew what he was doing.—New York Sun.

SMART NEW TRAYS.

For Use When Breakfast Is Served In Bed.

The breakfast tray as used in smart houses to convey the first repast to the overnight guest has become a work of art as well as the acme of daintiness.

Gone is the ordinary salver with its white cloth, which, while it did not silence appetite, did not, on the other hand, excite it, as the new one is designed to do.

Nowadays the tray follows some style of art, the Dresden being a popular choice, and the service used with it must correspond. The foundation of the piece is a square or oval of exquisite silk in the desired pattern, covered with heavy glass and surrounded with a projecting frame of wood with a substantial carrying handle at each end.

Where silk of Dresden pattern is employed the dainty china is selected to match. Special sets are the only thing for the purpose, as the pieces must all be in proportion and daintily small.

In addition to the service for tea or coffee, with its pot, pitcher, sugar bowl and cup, there are the bowl and saucer for porridge, a wee covered dish for scrambled eggs, creamed dried beef or a similar entree, a covered plate for chops or bacon—everything on the daintiest scale with regard to size.

A lovely one seen recently at a fashionable house had for foundation a piece of dainty tapestry in empire design, covered with an oval glass. The frame was of woven wicker of deep purplish tinge, oval, of course. With this went a delicious little empire china set with a decoration in the form of bands of purple and gold.

The dishes numbered a toast rack and a marmalade jar, which have become almost indispensable articles since so many Americans have acquired the English morning habit of toast and jam.

LURE OF THE LAW.

The Craze For Litigation Is America's Most Costly Folly.

If one were asked to name the costliest folly known in this country he would not be far from the mark if he should say it was the American craze for litigation.

In some communities, especially the small ones in rural districts, a man's importance seems to be measured by the number of lawsuits he has on hand, and he who has none is often regarded as a person of slight consequence.

But the habit of going to law is not confined to small neighborhoods nor to persons of trifling affairs, as a single instance will show. There is now in process of settlement in a neighboring state the estate of a man which at the time of his death was valued at $1,000,000. Rival claimants to the property engaged in litigation, which has extended over a period of several years, and now, as the end approaches, it is said the estate has dwindled to about $23,000.

Manifestly the parties to this litigation have made a heavy investment in experience; but, unhappily for them, it is not what financiers call a "liquid asset."—Docket.

round up to the lower corners of the clasp; then work each half separately up to the top of the clasp. The fillet crocheted is sewed to the clasp through the little holes for that purpose; then the bag is lined with any color of silk liked, and a crochet cord of one-half yard in length is worked for the handle. For this cord join 4 ch. in a ring and work round and round on these four stitches, putting a d. c. into each stitch for the required length. Fasten the ends securely with a few single stitches worked into the beginning of the cord and conceal the end of the thread in the center of the cord.

For working this gold thread into lace purchase strong brussels net of the best quality. Use a crochet hook that will pass easily through the mesh of the net, yet take the thread without splitting it. The stitches must be even and lie flat on the net; then much less filling will be necessary, and so the work can be done very quickly. Before commencing on the piece of lace practice on a small portion of the net until you can work the stitches fairly even.

Novel Card Parties.

A woman whose parties are sure to be a success makes up for her lack of money by originality. Her prizes for a card party can never be costly, so she makes them unusual.

At one affair the winner at each of the six tables was presented with a wicker basket of openwork design. This was lined with white tissue paper, tied with gay ribbon, which, opened, revealed five glasses of homemade orange marmalade.

Another time, at a spring party, each winner received a small japanned rimmed tray on which were set half a dozen tiny pots of well grown cuttings from a rare old rosebush.

Again, there were sets of homemade place cards, painted on water color paper and folded over to stand. The edges were gilt and each card had illuminated upon it an appropriate verse. Some of these sets were humorous, others quotations.

The Duke's Advice.

The great Duke of Wellington had an unfortunate experience at Oxford. He pronounced Jacobus with the second syllable "short" and was duly admonished. Shortly after the word Carolus came in his speech, and, profiting, as he thought, by experience, he made the second syllable long, only to be pulled up again. Possibly he reflected that there are worse terrors than those of the battlefield. This, at least, was his advice to an aspiring orator: "Say what you have to say, don't quote Latin and sit down."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Manifestly the parties to this litigation have made a heavy investment in experience; but, unhappily for them, it is not what financiers call a "liquid asset."—Docket.

MOONS OF THE UNIVERSE.

Besides Our Own Luna Twenty-five Others Are Known to Exist.

There are in all twenty-five moons besides our queen of night, Mars having two, Jupiter eight, Saturn ten, Uranus four and Neptune one, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. Of course new lunar additions are likely to be discovered at any time, although it is improbable that Mercury and Venus have any satellites or that Mars has more than two.

The two known moons of Mars are, indeed, very minute, neither being over fifty miles in diameter. On the other hand, Jupiter's first four satellites, as well as Ganymede, are each larger than Queen Luna, Ganymede having a diameter of about 3,550 miles. Titan of Saturn possesses a diameter approximating 3,000 miles, while that of Neptune's sole satellite is about 2,000 miles.

As respects our own moon, Queen Luna has only one-forty-ninth the size and one-eighty-first the weight of our earth. Luna's distance from us varies a good deal, from 221,000 miles to 252,000 miles. Her mean or average distance is about 238,000 miles.

Ate With Tears in His Eyes.

On one occasion General Scott attended a banquet where all the states of the Union were represented by a dish in some way characteristic of each commonwealth. Pennsylvania was represented by a bowl of sauerkraut, and in speaking of the fact the next morning the general remarked, "I partook of it with tears in my eyes." This fondness of Scott for the good things of the table, taken in conjunction with the famous "hasty plate of soup" incident, gave point to the name of "Marshal Turenne," with which he was once saluted by the Rev. Dr. Smith Payne, an inveterate punster. It was Dr. Payne who once exclaimed after hearing Ole Bull play, "If honorary degrees were conferred upon musicians Ole Bull would be fiddle D. D."

Blackjacks.

The earliest drinking vessels for wines and ales were those made from skins of animals, and these vessels still retain their popularity in the east and on the continent. In England these vessels were made of carefully tanned hides which were unbreakable and possessed everlasting properties. The blackjacks, famed in song and story, were shaped like pitchers and were fashioned from one large piece of leather, which was curled in the necessary manner. Pitch was smeared over the inside. These old blackjacks gave their name to the heavy riding boots worn by cavaliers, which came to be called jackboots. Owing to the popularity of the blackjacks the French declared that the English drank out of their boots.—London Globe.

have been received with astonishment, for it announced his conversion to home rule.

Sir Arthur, in explaining his change of faith, said that his position as a Unionist had always been that home rule would not be safe until economic conditions should be changed and until a gentler temper should be shown by the people, after local representative institutions already granted to Ireland had been tested. These conditions, he felt, had been complied with. He also thought that England, "just recovering from a period of absolute anarchy," was not in a position to criticize Ireland. The success of home rule in South Africa had also made a great impression on Sir Arthur's mind. In conclusion, he said:

"There may be an element of risk in home rule, but we ran the risk in Canada, and we ran the risk in Africa, so surely we need not fear, after two successes, to try it once again. I believe that after an experience of a united friendly Ireland, nothing would induce the North to go back to the old conditions."

NOTHING new, they tell us,
Underneath the sun;
Everything has been done—
Every single one.
But you may discover
On a closer view
Pleasant variations Quite as good as new.

Take a joke that's ancient,
Stale and almost flat,
Dress it up a little
In a summer hat
And a swell kimono
That the date mark hides;
At its latest antics
You will split your sides.

Listen to a lecture,
Hear a pretty song
Or perhaps a sermon,
If it's not too long.
Though the theme is mossy,
They will make a hit
If in different settings
They are made to fit.

Every theme and fancy,
Every tune and rime,
May have been exploited
Once upon a time,
But that doesn't matter
If they come across Served in variations
With a different sauce.

FOR THE SICKROOM.

Flowers Do Not Necessarily Bring Good Cheer.

To brighten a sickroom by a gift of flowers seems a simple matter and is often the only way open to sympathizing friends when the invalid is too weak to see them, but it requires more discretion than most people exercise. As an expression of kindly intention the flowers can hardly fail to be cheering, whatever they are, but otherwise they may be far from acceptable.

It was a wise woman who used her everyday common sense in this. Instead of choosing masses of cut flowers from a hothouse, to be charming for a day and then fade visibly, giving an impression of decay and mortality, she chose a potted plant, full of buds, that would open day by day, bringing an ever fresh interest into the monotony of the sickroom and suggesting life and growth.

The same common sense would also suggest flowers of cheerful color and not heavily scented. The fresh fragrance of a pot of violets will act as a real tonic to some posy lovers, but the strong perfume of hyacinths or lilies will stifle a delicate person and often produce dizziness. A bit of forethought can be exercised by finding out from the nurse the temperature at which the sickroom is generally kept and then consulting a florist as to what potted plant would keep in good condition in that particular atmosphere.

IN DEFENCE OF PUSS.

A Cat Is of Great Value to the World, Says Scientist.

Mr. W. G. Aitchison Robertson, M.D., delivered a lecture in Edinburgh recently under the auspices of the Zoological Society of Scotland on "The Cat Family, with Special Reference to the Domestic Cat." The lecturer gave a brief summary of the chief points of interest, from the anatomical point of view, of the members of the cat family, and then narrated some of the main facts in the life history of the larger cats. He showed that the extermination of tigers in certain parts of India had not been entirely advantageous, but that the destruction of such animals had allowed too free multiplication of antelopes, deer, etc., which lived on the produce of the field, and destroyed in this way much of the labor of the peasant. Allusion was made to the large number of different species of the smaller cats, but special attention was devoted to the domestic cat. Dr. Aitchison Robertson told how the present cat had been worshipped several thousand years ago by the Egyptians, and how it had been carried to Europe and so to Great Britain, and how its remains were found at present in excavations of Roman villas in this country. For many centuries the value of the cat remained high, but its excessive fertility had so lowered its value that at present the ordinary cat had little or no commercial value. This was a fact to be deplored, as it could not be sufficiently impressed upon the public that the cat had the highest value from an economical point of view. One had merely to consider what would happen if there were no cats; mice, rats, and other vermin would multiply without let or hindrance, and the damage done by them would be incalculable. It might be difficult to estimate the amount saved, but in every place of business, private house, custom house, or warehouse, where food was stored cats were the means of preventing an immense waste. Had gamekeepers not wantonly killed stoats, weasels, and cats there would in all probability have been no recent outbreak of rat plague in Suffolk, as these animals prey on and destroy rats and mice.

The common cat also proved of the highest service to the farmer, and in the east the only practical way of dealing with plague was by the introduction of cats—these animals destroyed the rats, which were the main cause of the spread of this disease. Another popular prejudice Dr. Robertson wished to do away with was the belief that the domestic cat carried disease. He stated that the cat does not suffer from true diphtheria as it affects the human being, and therefore could not communicate the disease in this way, and the idea that infection remained on the fur of such a clean animal was absurd, and if this mode of propagation were true the medical attendant would be a far more fertile source of infection than any animal.

Prosperity In Ireland.

In an article reviewing the condition of real estate business in the United Kingdom, as shown by the transactions of the year 1911, the London Economist refers to Ireland as having exhibited for more distinctly than any other part of the country an improved state of things. "In Ireland," says The Economist, "the magic of property has worked wonders, and the mere fact that the tenants own their lands has produced an enormous increase in agricultural industry and prosperity." This statement is in accord with the observations and narratives of visitors to Ireland for some time past. The land purchase legislation enacted by Parliament after so many years of agitation has amply vindicated the claims of those who so earnestly and persistently urged that reform of the system of land tenure was the one most vital need of the country. Foremost among the names of those whose influence was exerted in behalf of this wise and salutary policy should be placed that of John Stuart Mill; how much misery and how much political difficulty and danger might have been obviated had his counsels been heeded seventy instead of twenty years ago, it is impossible to compute.

Rust Stains.

Many a housewife is at a loss to account for rust spots which appear on clothes that often have been washed in seemingly rustless utensils. These spots are frequently due to impure bluing, much of which contains prussian blues, compounds of two iron salts which are precipitated by alkalis.
Therefore it is wise to take the precaution of having the clothes well rinsed in clear water before immersing them in a blue water.

Most of the remedies useful in removing ink stains are equally effectual in removing rust stains. Sometimes bleaching fluid or acetic acid in clear water or even javelle water removes the stains readily. Some of the most favored recipes are to rub the stains with salts of lemon and wash in clean water. On fast colors use muriatic acid by spreading the rust spot over a bowl containing clear hot water and apply the acid drop by drop until the stain lightens and then immerse it immediately in the hot water. Soak linens all night in sour milk and on the following day expose them to the sunlight, frequently wetting them with lemon juice. By many pineapple juice is held to be just as effective as lemon juice.

Knee Pads For the Housewife.

Many a young housekeeper and homemaker who is anxious to economize does all of her own work and suffers regularly each week from pains in her knees, caused by doing the unaccustomed labor of wiping the stains from hardwood floors of living rooms, tiled floors of bathrooms and linoleum covered floors of kitchens.
For these housekeepers a clever woman has invented the knee pad, which is merely an oblong of cotton wadding about two inches thick that can be slipped into a white linen bag of the same size and placed under the top of the stocking during house cleaning times. This cushion, keeping the body from almost direct contact with any sort of hard surface, will prevent that affliction known in England as "housemaid's knee," but all too common among American housewives.

Keep This In Mind.

A can of French dressing will keep for a week or more on the ice and has the advantage of always being ready.
Before turning out the portion needed shake the can vigorously until its contents are thoroughly emulsified. This is one of the very best ways of emulsi-fying the oil and vinegar.

Serious Problem.

"Who will do the washing in China?"

BEFORE TREATMENT

AFTER TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience:
"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret.
Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbsness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the New Method Treatment and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

Monday afternoon two rinks of curlers paid Kingston a visit and had a pleasant game with the curlers of Rockwood Asylum. The rinks were: J. Daly, P. C. Killorin, F. J. Vanalstine, and H. Taylor, skip; J. Marsh, J. Fitzpatrick, G. P. Reiffenstein, and M. Graham, skip. Mr. Taylor's rink won 11-6, and Mr. Graham's rink won 9-8. The outing was a most pleasant one, to say nothing of the fact that in years to come the event will prove of historical interest, as it is very seldom that there is curling on March 25th.

The girls of St. Mary Magdalene Church will hold a small sale of work, and serve afternoon tea in the school room, on Wednesday, April 10th, from 2 to 6 o'clock.

During the trip of the curlers to Kingston on Monday a real rich joke was pulled off which is too good to keep. The members of this enthusiastic bunch caught a street car to take them to the scene of action, (and by the way the car was about thirty minutes behind schedule time) and while enroute one of the anxious ones thought he would intimate to the conductor their destination, in order that no further mishap would cause any more delay, so he went to the rear of the car and in a very mild and humble way reported the fact that the curlers wanted to get off at the asylum. He was apparently knocked cold by the reply of the conductor (who was only a mere lad not out of his teens) who, without winking an eyelid said, "Oh, I knew that." The joke was evidently much enjoyed by the occupants of the car as roars of laughter followed.

Dredging the River.

The supplementary estimates of the Dominion Government were published on Wednesday and total over nineteen millions. While Picton, Belleville and Kingston receive substantial sums for harbor improvements, the Napanee river will remain in the same condition in which it has always been. No sum appears in the estimates for this much needed work. When the deputation went to Ottawa some weeks ago to try and secure a grant for this purpose the deputation came home with the impression that the river would be dredged this year. Our Mr. Paul is ...to Ottawa some weeks ago to try and secure a grant for this purpose the deputation came home with the impression that the river would be dredged this year. Our Mr. Paul is evidently not on his job or else his influence with the government is nil, or the Napanee river would have been dredged this year. Anti-election promises are all very well but intended merely to catch votes, not to perform any work. If this is the best Mr. Paul can do the county should seek a different representative.

LATER.

Mayor Waller was speaking to Mr. W. J. Paul, M. P., over the phone on Thursday and Mr. Paul states that despite there being no sun in the estimates for dredging the Napanee river, the river will nevertheless be dredged this year.

W. S. Herrington's Lecture.

Mr. Herrington repeated his lecture on "Ancient and Modern Mexico" on Tuesday evening, in the Town Hall, for the benefit of the Churchwoman's Guild of St. Mary Magdalene's Church. Those who had heard it before and those who had not, were all delighted with the evening's entertainment. Mr. Herrington has a manner of presenting the subject in the most interesting way and his description of the Scenery of Mexico, its every day life both with the rich and poor, its churches, pyramids, gardens, cities and homes was all that could be desired. The views gave one an excellent idea of that country. His lecture followed the general plan of the one given on Feb. 16th an account of which appeared in our issue of Feb. 23rd. This town is to be congratulated on having a man, with the ability to present a subject of this nature, who is willing at all times to make the effort and give his subject to study required to present it in such an excellent manner. There was a fair sized audience present and the Guild netted a good sum to add to the fund which is to be used to buy a piano for the Sunday School. The meeting closed with, "God Save the King".

Resolution of Appreciation.

The following resolution was passed by Trinity Church Auxiliary at the March meeting:

Resolved that this Auxiliary place on record an expression of our sincere regret because of the removal of our highly esteemed President, Mrs. Cairns. We realize that through her departure we are losing a valuable helper in all the work of our Auxiliary, one who could always be depended upon to support every effort made to forward the interest of the Woman's Missionary Society. We desire especially to give a cordial tribute to her efficiency in filling the office of President for the past four years. We feel that a great deal of the success that crowned our work during that period has been due to her careful supervision, her untiring zeal and her inspiring leadership. We desire also to include in this resolution our grateful recognition of the valuable service rendered by Miss Cairns as Superintendent of Trinity Mission Band. We earnestly pray that He who has blessed them and made them a blessing in this community will lead them into larger spheres of usefulness in their new home, and that they may long be spared to consecrate their talents and their influence to the great work of extending Christ's kingdom.

TO MR. AND MRS. KEECH:

Dear Friends—We your friends and neighbors, having learned of your intended departure from our circle, have assembled ourselves together here this evening to show the appreciation and esteem in which you are held in our neighborhood. You have been to the most of us like a father and mother.
In the time of sickness you have always been ready to lend a helping hand when an opportunity was given and while health and strength permitted, you were always willing to do what you could to extend God's kingdom here on earth. Now, as a token of regard, we beg you to accept this chair, not for its intrinsic value, but for the esteem in which you are held, and we trust that God's richest and choicest blessing may rest upon you while you remain here on earth.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors.

HENS MUST GET BUSY.

Mr. Hare tells me that the average Ontario hen only lays about 90 eggs a year. But up at Guelph the average is 240 eggs a year, most of them laid in winter when the price is high, and they had one hen that laid 282 eggs in a year and cackled according. Hens as don't pay ain't kept around there long. They don't keep no pet hens that turn out to be star boarders. For thirty years I've fed hens when I thought they needed feeding and they laid eggs whenever they took a notion. From now on, though, those hens are going to pay for their feed. They've got to furnish me with eggs or—potpie.—Josh Tompkins in Port Perry Star.
